DESCRIPTION

The machine is designed to efficiently handle the product as it enters in a specified number of lanes, determined by the pack pattern. With the help of a servo-operated pick head, the product is gripped from the infeed conveyor and transferred to the case or tray blank, which has been staged from the magazine. A servo-operated elevator plate swiftly pulls the blank and product downwards, while simultaneously folding up the side walls. Once the case is filled, it transfers horizontally past the glue applicators and is stopped at the compression section. It is at this stage that the case-sealing process is completed, ensuring protection and security for the contents within.
